RESPONSIBLE CONSUMER AND MANUFACTURING

Waste management and recycling is one of the best ways to influence the future of the Earth. Processing is important both for the natural environment and for the healthy life of people. The increase in prosperous living and the fact that people buy more products means that more waste will eventually appear. Population growth is also an important factor in increasing the amount of waste. Most of the new packaging and technological products developed include non-biodegradable materials.

Waste is taking up more and more space, and their storage areas are quickly replenished. It is much more expensive to make products from raw materials than to produce products from processed products. In this way, financial costs in the economy are reduced as a result of the study of processing.

Solid Waste Recycling has become a growing business in recent years. For medicine and society, the problem of waste recycling remains one of the most pressing problems.
